He was one of the youngest writers ever hired for Friends on its first season, and created Spin City at the ripe old age of As early as high school, Lawrence had visions of being a standup comedian until he figured out other people were better at delivering his material than he. His long poem Raven with Robin's Egg, is an attempt to do so on a number of different levels: the emptying of language, fear of the unknowable and the technological society's 'elimination of chance,' the breakdown of relationships, the confusion and uncertainty around the question, 'in what can we put our hope.'
