Central Reading Literature and Writing Argument University. In response to the demands of the Altona community that he rescind the ban, Falk demanded that Eybeschuetz appear before a bet din of three ordained rabbis to answer for his actions. He deplored the way the orphanage in Halle was represented and staged as if it were a holy place, and due to this exempt from criticism. He believes the people must regularly congregate and expresses it through his assertion that "the moment a people allows itself to be represented, it is no longer free: it no longer exists.
